Our Statement

We have no right to forget those deprived of freedom and life in the Laogai.

We are seeking the truth and hoping that such horrible and inhumane practices will cease to exist as soon as possible, and will never recur.

In China, democracy and Laogai are incompatible.

我们没有权利忘却劳改营中失去自由及生命的人。

我们在寻求真理, 希望这类残暴及非人道的行为早日消除并且永不再现。

在中国, 民主与劳改不可能并存。

THE LAOGAI RESEARCH FOUNDATION

The Laogai Research Foundation, founded in 1992, is a non-profit, tax-exempt organization [501 (c) (3)] incorporated in the State of Virginia, USA. The Foundation's purpose is to gather information on the Chinese Laogai - the most extensive system of forced labor camps in the world today – and disseminate this information to journalists, human rights activists, government officials and the general public.

Preface

Over the past decade, China has awed the world with its rapid economic development. By the end of 2006, China's Gross Domestic Product (GDP) annual growth is expected to reach 10.7%, and 9.8% by 2007.¹ China is also becoming a major power in international politics most recently as a mediator in the ongoing North Korea negotiations, and its expanding relationships with African nations. Many scholars theorize that economic development is a catalyst for democratization and liberalization, yet in the case of China this is far from true.² In fact, the more China advances, the more its people are restricted politically and socially. The Chinese government recognizes that stability is paramount to maintaining power and fulfilling its economic goals. The Laogai, China's brutal system of labor camps, continues to be not only an important tool of repression, but also an important source of revenue for the Chinese Communist Party (CCP).

In 1994, increased international attention to the Laogai system caused the Chinese government to drop the term Laogai (reform through labor) from its official documents and replace it with the word prison. This gesture was designed to create the impression abroad that the Chinese penal system is similar to those in the West. However, the fundamental roles of the Laogai are the same as they were during Chairman Mao Zedong's reign. The function of "reform through labor" is continuously emphasized, and the slogan for the Laogai "Reform first, production second," is still written on the prisons gates. Millions of Chinese in the Laogai face daily "reform" exercises and political indoctrination. Mental and physical abuse is common. The Laojiao (reeducation through labor) component of the Laogai, revived in the early 1980s, gives the government the right to arrest and detain dissenters without a formal charge or trial for up to three years. Laojiao is commonly used for punishing and suppressing political and religious dissent, and is currently exercised to suppress the Falun Gong and Christian movements.

The "production" aspect of the Laogai slogan highlights the dual roles of the system. In 1988 the Ministry of Justice in the Criminal Reform Handbook stated that the Laogai "organizes criminals in labor and production, thus creating wealth for society." Our research and analysis shows that the Laogai has benefited tremendously from globalization. International trade provides the camps access to hard currency as they export their products— everything from socks to diesel engines, raw cotton to processed graphite. Throughout the last decade, Laogai enterprises in certain regions, most notably Liaoning and Shandong provinces, have developed into small economic empires. These camps produce hundreds of millions of yuan in profit and pay millions in taxes. The international community and even the ordinary Chinese citizen is completely unaware of how the economic function of the Laogai often supersedes the legal purpose.

Preface

Due to strong resistance from Western nations against forced labor products, in 1991 China's State Council re-emphasized the ban on the export of "forced labor products" and stipulated that no prison is allowed to cooperate or establish joint ventures with foreign investors. However, the State Council's move was merely superficial and prisoners today still make large quantities of forced labor products as noted in this book. Moreover, the Chinese government grants special privileges to enterprises using labor camps and prisons to produce exports. Prisoners are forced to manufacture products without payment and often work 10-17 hour days, sometimes even overnight. Those who cannot fulfill their tasks are beaten and tortured.

Another component related to the Laogai is the death penalty. The fact that the CCP deems execution statistics "state secrets" makes it extremely difficult for the world to ascertain the real number of executions and organ transplants. NGO's and scholars believe the number executed is greater than 10,000 people per year.³ In the 1990s China began to use lethal injection for a more "civilized, progressive and humane" way to execute criminals. This execution method often takes place in hospitals or "execution vans"—vehicles waiting at the execution site ready to remove fresh organs. LRF believes that lethal injection is abused and often unjustly used toward the end of harvesting prisoners' organs.

In 1992, the Laogai Research Foundation (LRF) was established to gather information and to educate the public about the Laogai. Since its inception, LRF has expanded its focus to document and report on other systemic human rights violations in China including public executions, organ harvesting, the coercive enforcement of China's population control policy, and persecution of religious believers. After over a decade of efforts in 2003 the word Laogai was added to the Oxford English Dictionary and the Duden German Dictionary in 2004. The inclusion of Laogai in these lexicons was a great accomplishment for LRF and others fighting to raise awareness about the Laogai. Oxford and Duden's definitions clarify that unlike the Gulag, which is now a historical institution, the Laogai is a fully operational system in China today.

The Laogai Handbook, now in its 9th edition, is the world's only independent and publicly available catalog of China's Laogai, the most extensive and covert network of forced labor camps in the world. This edition, which incorporates information uncovered through September 2006, identifies 1,045 camps by name and location (693 prisons and 352 re-education through labor camps, not including those that have been abolished or that we cannot verify, marked with an *). Yet this number is only an estimate and most likely many more exist. The Chinese government considers national statistics about the Laogai to be state secrets—but the Laogai is a difficult secret to keep.

Most information for this book was found on the Internet. Many prisons have their own websites describing size, population, and enterprise products, however some of these could often only be accessed for two or three days before they vanished. LRF attributes this to the ongoing CCP campaign to keep Laogai information from the public. On the other hand, any statistics regarding Laogai production were emphasized and available to anyone. Other sources include LRF's own document archives and LRF employee secret investigations of Laogai camps, sources from the Library of Congress for historical statistics, and first hand accounts from former prisoners.⁴ Some descriptions of working conditions within the camps were found on www.minghui.org, a Falun Gong created website and are noted. Although we cannot verify the statements on this site, from previous research and other sources with similar accounts, LRF believes they are accurate.

The Laogai Research Foundation believes that as long as the Chinese Communist Party's dictatorship exists, the Laogai will continue to serve as its essential mechanism for suppression and persecution. China is a growing world power and with this power must come responsibility. The most vital responsibility for a government is to respect the human rights of its people. The Laogai system, like the Soviet Gulag, is a violation of basic human rights. The Laogai is incompatible with freedom and democracy.

We invite you to read the Laogai Handbook carefully, to contemplate the number of camps, the variety of goods made, and to think of the men and women who are suffering in the Laogai today. Only the attention of the world can bring about an end to that suffering, and this begins with you.

Introduction

Dictatorships throughout history have used mechanisms of fear and control to maintain the absolute power of their regime and annihilate political dissent. Hitler built the concentration camps of the twentieth century not only to terminate the Jews but also to destroy his political opposition. Lenin began building labor camps right after the Russian Revolution to punish the anti-Bolshevik “unreliable elements” in 1918. His heir Stalin threw tens of thousands of Russians of different nationalities into the Gulag after the Great Purge that took place in the 1930s. Labor camps continued to play a significant role in the Soviet Union’s industrialization. Gulag prisoners were used as a source of infinite manpower to excavate the natural resources throughout the vast nation.

Hitler’s concentration camps were liberated after the collapse of the Nazi regime. Stalin’s Gulags were widely shut down after his death in 1953, but the successors to the Soviet regime continued to use the camps to suppress political dissidents. Only in the late 1980s did Gorbachev finally close the Gulag’s forced labor camps, making the word gulag a historical term.

The world has made a point in remembering the Nazi concentration camps, the Soviet Gulag, and has paid extensive attention to the people currently suffering in North Korean labor camps. However the international community has paid much less notice to the repressive mechanism of the Chinese regime--the Laogai. It was not until 1992, when Harry Wu published his first book, Laogai: The Chinese Gulag, that the world was alerted to the horrors of the Laogai. As a response to the increased international attention, especially the comparisons between the Laogai and the Soviet Gulag, China’s government took the unusual step of issuing an official White Paper. The report defended the Laogai as a regular prison system for detaining, punishing, and reforming convicted criminals, no different from other systems in the world. The report even contended that the Laogai could serve as a useful model for other countries seeking to transform bad elements into productive citizens.

The Chinese word Laogai, meaning “reform through labor,” refers to a system of forced labor camps that spans China’s territory--from the highly industrialized prison factories of the eastern coastal cities to the isolated, fenceless farms of the West. And while Chinese officials and others tout the so-called “legal reforms” that are being carried out in the market economy dominating China today, these reforms have not brought about real changes to the Laogai system, and the camps are more prevalent than ever.

An examination of the Laogai in both theory and practice reveals a system that is fundamentally different than other systems of crime and punishment. Regardless of the Chinese government’s claims that conditions have improved in the Laogai and the Chinese judicial system, the ideology behind the institution is the same.

The persistence of totalitarian power in China pre-determines certain distinctions of its prison system according to the

Introduction

Communist Party:

The nature of the prison is determined by the nature of state power. Ours is a socialist state exercising the democratic dictatorship of the people. As one of the tools of the people's democratic dictatorship, our Laogai facilities, representing the working class and the working people of our country, exercise dictatorship over a minority of elements who are hostile to socialism, thus safeguarding our socialist system.⁵

In keeping with the role of protecting the so-called “people’s democratic dictatorship”, the Laogai takes on a political function. The purpose of the Laogai is not simply to punish criminals in accordance with the law, but to further strengthen the dictatorship of the Communist Party by suppressing dissent. CCP policies admit to this practice:

Our Laogaidui system constitutes an important part of our public security system, and is one of the tools of the dictatorship of the proletariat; it serves to punish and reform all counter-revolutionaries and other criminals.⁶

⁶ Laodong gaizao gongzuo (Labor Reform Work), Beijing: CCP internal document, 1985.

In the fifty years since the creation of the Laogai, little of its organizational structure has changed. The Laogai system, despite minor modifications in regulations, is still governed by the same directives that were issued under Mao. These policies have led to three distinct categories of incarceration: Convict Labor Reform (Laogai), Reeducation through Labor (Laojiao), Forced Job Placement (Jiuye), and five sub-categories: detention centers, custody and repatriation, shelter and investigation, juvenile offender camps, and psychiatric hospitals.

Today the Laogai system is thriving and an unknown number of people continue to suffer in 1,045 camps. While many are incarcerated for ordinary crimes, others are convicted of crimes that are political in nature, such as “endangering state and public security” or “revealing state secrets”. These crimes are so broadly defined that essentially authorities can arrest almost anyone.

In addition the general lack of due process in the Chinese legal system victimizes countless individuals. An increasing number of citizens are in need of legal counsel, but only a few can afford the high lawyer’s fees. Many people are often convicted and sentenced without a trial, and even if one is held they are often refused the right to adequately defend themselves, or are convicted with false “evidence”. For example on August 24, 2006 the blind human rights activist Chen Guangcheng was found guilty of “gathering a crowd to disrupt traffic” and damaging property. Just before the trial, a group of “unknown people” accused Chen’s lawyers of pick-pocketing. As a result, they were held by police overnight and could not attend Chen's trial. Chen's lawyers were only released after his trial ended, and Chen was forced to use court-appointed attorneys.⁷

Legal reforms beginning in 1978 and continuing into the 1990s did occur in the judicial field. Hundreds of laws and regulations were reviewed and new laws were made addressing arbitration, notarization, and attorneys. Theoretically, there are now more managerial mechanisms than before, however the legal system is still based on the principle of acting "in favor of the leading role of the Communist Party". Recent statistics can attest to the unbalanced public and private legal situation in the country. The number of judges in China increased from 130,000 in 2001 to 190,000 in 2005, while the number of lawyers increased from 100,198 to only 110,000 in 2005.⁸ According to the US NGO Dui Hua Foundation, 99% of those tried for the crime of "endangering state security" are convicted.⁹

In the past few years a group of elite lawyers have banded together to protect the civil rights of many groups including relocated urban inhabitants, dissidents, Falun Gong practitioners, religious followers, etc. Among this group of activists that challenge the Chinese judicial system is Gao Zhisheng, Pu Zhiqiang, Fan Yafeng, Li Heping, Zhang Sizhi, Xu Zhiyong, and Teng Biao. By taking on sensitive cases, these lawyers risk their careers and the safety of their families to defend their clients and to defend human rights.

The following sections discuss the history and theory behind the Laogai institution, its components and economy.

History of the Laogai

The concept of the Laogai was not a Chinese innovation, but originated in the Soviet Union where the Communists had already formed the Gulag. In 1950 China and the Soviet Union signed a defense treaty that stipulated that the Soviet government would aid China and assist in the development of certain basic social institutions, including the penal system. This tutelage helped to create a system that blended the tenets of both Chinese and Soviet philosophies of reform through labor and is the basis of the Laogai today.¹⁰

Marxism-Leninism holds that the state is a machine of violence, made up of the army, police, courts, prisons, and other compulsory facilities, for one class to rule another. Mao Zedong integrated this ideology into the Communist Party and made the Laogai a key component of the state machine. Under Mao's direction and with help from Soviet experts, the CCP began building its nationwide system of labor reform camps in the 1950s. Similar to the Soviet Gulag, a primary purpose of the Laogai system was to root out and isolate the vast numbers of political prisoners that resulted from the new regime's consolidation of power:

Ours is a socialist state. A socialist state's Laogai facilities,...as an important component of the people's democratic dictatorship, Laogai facilities of all levels are established- prisons, Laogai camps, Laojiao camps, and juvenile criminal camps, all of them are tools representing the interests of the proletariat and the masses exercising dictatorship over a minority of hostile elements originating from exploiter classes.¹¹

The term "hostile elements" referred to the ever-changing targets of political campaigns launched by China's newly formed Communist government, including the members and supporters of Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist government and "class enemies" such as landlords and wealthy businessmen, often labeled "historical counterrevolutionaries." Subsequent purges from within the CCP further swelled the Laogai population, filling the camps with "rightists" and "leftists" alike, depending on the shifting political winds.

Mao Zedong immediately recognized prisoners as a huge source of manpower, and added an amendment to the "Resolution of the Third National Public Security Conference", in 1951:

¹¹ Deng Yuzhen. Southwest Law School Law Publishing House, 1987, p. 41-2, 45-6. Approved by the Laogai Bureau of the Ministry of Justice.

The large number of people who are serving their sentences is an enormous source of labor. In order to reform them, in order to solve the problems of the prisons, in order that these sentenced counterrevolutionaries will not just sit there and be fed for nothing, we should begin to organize our Laogai work. In the areas where this work already exists, it should be expanded.¹²

During the early years of the Laogai, inmates were the primary labor force for massive state-run reconstruction projects that would have been impossible to undertake with regular workers. Millions of prisoners worked on irrigation, mining and dam building projects that were carried out during the Great Leap Forward at the end of the 1950s. Most of these projects took place in the more remote provinces, such as Gansu, Guizhou, Xinjiang and Tibet. Prisoners in these areas were forced to reclaim wastelands and to unearth dangerous mines. As a result of treacherous conditions combined with the famine caused by the Great Leap forward policies, hundreds of thousands of inmates perished in prisons during this time.¹³ performance troupes. Prisoners who were musically or artistically talented and were not considered violent (meaning mostly political prisoners) were assigned to groups who would travel to other prisons and to meetings of Party officials where they would perform. Their performances generally featured songs that extolled the praises of Chairman Mao and operas depicting the liberation of the Chinese people through the Communist Party. According to testimony gathered by the Laogai Research Foundation, these groups included opera singers, orchestras, musicians of traditional Chinese music and actors and actresses.¹⁴ Gulag researchers report that these performing groups also existed in the Soviet Union, and they even claim that these prisoners helped to maintain certain cultural and artistic traditions of the Russian people.¹⁵ While there is no research claiming that prisoner performing troupes in China in any way developed native Chinese culture (on the contrary, their purpose was to promote Communist and more specifically Maoist doctrine), we know that most prisoners in these groups were treated well and were not forced to labor as other prisoners in the Laogai system.

¹⁴ See Difficult Years by Wenche He'en, Washington, D.C.: Laogai Research Foundation Black Series, 2004. Author Wenche He'en was born into a prominent Manchurian family. After graduating from a Shanghai acting college he was falsely denounced as a rightist in 1958 and spent nearly 20 years in the Laogai. His autobiography tells how, as a prisoner, he was designated to organize a theater group that gave performances for the prisoners and wardens.

¹⁵ Leong, Albert. Gulag and Laogai. Eugene: University of Oregon Press, 1999.

The quasi-legal basis for the Laogai was established in the 1954 “Regulations on Reform through Labor.”¹⁶ These regulations were further developed in the 1954 “Temporary Disciplinary Methods for the Release of Criminals Completing their Terms and for the Implementation of Forced Job Placement,” and the 1957 “Reeducation through Labor Policies,” which was amended in 1979 with the “Supplementary Reeducation through Labor Regulations.”¹⁷ Thus the three primary institutions of the Laogai were established: Laogai camps, Forced Job Placement, and Laojiao (reeducation through labor) Camps.

Throughout the early Communist period, China remained a nation with virtually no organized legal system. Chinese courts functioned as an arm of the Party, using numerous documents and directives from Mao Zedong and other top leaders to maintain their power monopoly. As a popular saying in mainland China goes, “policy is better than law, and leadership is better than law, and leadership is better than policy.”¹⁸ It was not until after Mao Zedong’s death and Deng Xiaoping’s subsequent “opening” of China that the nation was forced to begin the task of developing some semblance of a legal system.

Because the reasoning for China’s opening was motivated more by a desire to improve economic development than to achieve any development in the political system, the majority of laws written related to economics and business, and only a few laws were relevant to the prison system. Among these, the Criminal Law of the PRC was among the most important. Signed into law in 1979, this law included guidelines on Laogai ideology, crime and punishment, the death penalty, and three different categories of political offenses. These categories include the following: crimes of counterrevolution, crimes of endangering public security, and crimes of disrupting the order of social administration. The law defines “counterrevolutionary crimes” as the following:

All acts endangering the People’s Republic of China committed with the goal of over-throwing the political power of the dictatorship of the proletariat and the socialist system.¹⁹

The 1979 law code was also accompanied by a new code on criminal procedures specifying how cases were to be investigated and adjudicated according to the law.

Deng Xiaoping, labeled the pragmatist, rehabilitated hundreds of thousands of so-called counterrevolutionaries, ending mass purges. Although many people thought the years of horror had passed Deng continued to justify suppressing political dissidents:

Under the present conditions, using the suppressive force of our nation to attack and disintegrate all types of counter-revolutionary bad elements, anti-party anti-socialist elements and serious criminal offenders in order to preserve public security is entirely in accord with the demands of the people and with the demands of socialist modernization construction.²⁰

The CCP, to this day, is no more tolerant of dissent. Beginning with the brutal crackdown on those who participated in the Democracy Wall Movement of 1979, Deng set the rules for Chinese political life in the post-Mao era. Authorities often do not think twice about suspending the legal guarantees that are codified in the nation’s constitution and laws. Against a backdrop of modernization and reform in Chinese corporate law, dissidents are still detained illegally, deprived of legal representation, tortured, forced to labor and have their sentences extended for political reasons. In short, they remain the victims of a regime that does not respect the rule of law.

Thus even as China moves towards further economic integration with the international community, the Chinese prison camp system retains its political function. According to the Chinese government’s Criminal Reform Handbook (approved by the Laogai Bureau of the Ministry of Justice in 1988):

The nature of the prison as a tool of the dictatorship of classes is determined by the nature of state power. The nature of our Laogai facilities, which are a tool of the people's democratic dictatorship for punishing and reforming criminals, is inevitably determined by the nature of our socialist state, which exercises 'The People's Democratic Dictatorship.' The fundamental task of our Laogai facilities is punishing and reforming criminals. To define their functions concretely, they fulfill tasks in the following three fields: 1. Punishing criminals and putting them under surveillance. 2. Reforming criminals. 3. Organizing criminals in labor and production, thus creating wealth for society. Our Laogai facilities are both facilities of dictatorship and special enterprises.²¹

Several more legal reforms came in the 1990s, the most significant of these being the revised Criminal Code of 1997 and the Criminal Procedure Code of 1997. These two codes brought changes to certain provisions from the 1979 versions, although such alterations in language resulted in little progress in practice. For example, in the new law, the section from the 1979 law that was entitled "counterrevolutionary crimes" was renamed "crimes against state security," and the previously stated definition of counterrevolutionary laws was deleted from the provisions, and the list of political crimes remains within the law with few changes from its previous version. Far from indicating that activities previously considered "counterrevolutionary crimes" are now legal, this omission expands the scope of punishable acts to all those which fit the vague, undefined notion of "endangering state security." Additionally, both the 1979 and 1997 versions of the Criminal Procedure Code included provisions for protection of rights to due process and to appeal in what appears on paper to be a law-abiding system of crime and punishment.²²

Reports of human rights groups, governments and multi-lateral organizations everywhere document China's continuing failure to protect rights of due process for its citizens. In recent years, many reports have even stated that circumstances have deteriorated as China has carried out crackdowns on groups such as Falun Gong, the China Democracy Party, and Internet authors who Communist authorities feel pose a threat to their power. The government has also recently cracked down on the large numbers of petitioners who have flocked to Beijing to seek justice for the loss of property due to construction projects, as well as for unfair employment practices and other grievances.²³

Introduction

Since the 1980's, the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) has changed its focus from Marxist ideology to economic advancement, and the Chinese people do enjoy more social rights than they did thirty years ago. However they are still denied fundamental political rights such as the freedoms of speech, press, assembly, and association because the CCP believes that political stability is the key to development.

Therefore the underlying rationale for China's forced labor camps remains political necessity. The primary purpose of the Laogai is not simply to maintain order in society or to punish criminals in accordance with the law, but to protect and the dictatorship of the CCP and to promote its policies. This is carried out through two unique features of the Laogai--thought reform and forced labor--aspects that differentiate this system from the Soviet Gulag.

Thought Reform

Beginning with the Communist takeover, thought reform (sixiang gaizao) has been an intrinsic part of the Laogai system, and is perhaps its most unique aspect. Premier Zhou Enlai began the thought reform movement in China's colleges and universities. On September 29, 1951, drawing from personal experience, Zhou gave a five hour-long speech at Beijing University entitled "Regarding the reform of the intellectuals", stating that thought reform was the only way for intellectuals to adjust to the new socialist China. After this speech, Mao Zedong asserted that "thought reform, especially the thought reform of the intellectuals, is one of the most important conditions necessary to achieve real democratic reform and the step-by-step industrialization of our nation."²⁴ In contrast, the Soviets never incorporated thought reform activities into the Gulag system. One of the first public statements made regarding this can be found in a People's Daily editorial from 1954 outlining the basic penal philosophy of the CCP:

All crimes have definite sociological roots. The evil ideology and evil habits left behind by the old society... still remain in the minds of some people to a marked degree. Thus if we are to wipe all crimes from their root, in addition to inflicting on the criminal the punishment due, we must also carry out various effective measures to transform the various evil ideological conceptions in the minds of the people so that they may be educated and reformed into new people.²⁵

Under Mao, attempts were made to thoroughly remold those criminals with "exploiting class origins" into "new socialist beings.” Forced confessions, endless self-criticisms, struggle sessions in which one was humiliated and criticized by one’s fellow inmates, and collective labor under brutal conditions were meant to break one’s will and force one to submit to communist indoctrination. As Jean Pasqualini, a Corsican-Chinese and co-founder of the Laogai Research Foundation, wrote in his 1973 book Prisoner of Mao, often, the aim of prison authorities was “not so much to make you invent non-existent crimes, but to make you accept your ordinary life, as you led it, as rotten and sinful and worthy of punishment.”²⁶

When Deng Xiaoping came to power in the late 1970s, although he declared China’s revolution officially over, Deng made statements testifying to the continuing validity of class struggle and thought reform:

In a socialist society there will still be counterrevolutionaries, hostile elements, various types of criminals who disrupt the socialist order and other bad elements, corrupt thieves and robbers, and new exploiting opportunists; moreover, this type of phenomenon is impossible to eliminate totally on a long-term basis. Although their struggle is not the same as historical inter-class struggle (it is impossible for them to openly constitute a public class), it should still be regarded as a special type of class struggle, or perhaps as a special type of class struggle that can still remain under the conditions of a socialist society. It is still necessary for us to exercise the power of the dictatorship over these people. If we do not subject them to the dictatorship, then it will be impossible to have democratic socialism.”²⁷

Today, while the intense political study sessions of the Maoist era no longer exist, thought reform is still present in the Laogai. Prisoners are forced to confess their crimes and the Chinese legal system still presumes guilt and not innocence. All prisoners must renounce any political and religious beliefs that the state considers subversive. Democracy activists, Christian and Falun Gong followers alike all must confess their “crimes” against the nation, recant their beliefs, and undergo special reeducation classes, which according to reports may involve torture. Peer pressure and humiliation is also a well-known tenet of Laogai thought reform. Prisoners are turned against one another and are forced to criticize and sometimes even physically beat one another in struggle sessions. This reinforces the prisoner’s isolation and the feeling that they will not become part of the group until they allow themselves to be “re-educated.”²⁸ Even more common in contemporary China, however, is the melding of reform and labor to produce the desired results.

Introduction

Forced Labor

The grueling, punitive forced labor component of the Laogai, aside from being a cruel means of physical punishment, also provides financial benefits for the Chinese government. Since the establishment of Deng Xiaoping's "open" China and the formation of China's market economy, the Chinese government has sought to make a profit from the Laogai. All prison enterprises are state-owned, meaning the government provides land, property, equipment and financial support. Goods made in the Laogai are not only a part of China's domestic economy, but are also filtering into foreign markets including the United States.

The theoretical basis of reform through labor is rooted in the writings of Marx and Engels, interpreted first by the Soviets and then by Mao Zedong. The fundamental premise is that members of the exploiting class do not possess the proletariat ideology therefore they must be taught to work like the proletariat to transform their thinking.²⁹ According to Communist theory, the ultimate goal of forced labor is twofold-production and reform:

²⁹ Harold Tanner. China Information, "China's Gulag Reconsidered: Labor Reform in the 1980s and 1990s," Vol. 9, No. 2/3, Winter, 1994-1995.

Laogai production serves as a means for reforming prisoners and bears the political obligation of punishing and reforming prisoners; it also serves as an economic unit producing goods for society and bears the economic obligation set by guidelines of the state. These dual obligations and dual accomplishments (the reforming of prisoners into new men and the production of material goods) must be advanced and practiced throughout the entire process of Laogai production.³⁰

As a result, the Laogai forces its prisoners to plant, harvest, engineer, manufacture, and process all types of products for sale in the domestic and international markets. The theory behind the Laogai is clear:

Except for those who must be exterminated physically due to political considerations, human beings must be utilized as a productive force with submissiveness as the prerequisite. Laogai units force prisoners to labor. The Laogai's fundamental policy is, 'Forced labor is the means, while thought reform is the basic aim.'³¹

According to Article 74 of the 1954 Law of Reform through Labor (zhonghua renmin gongheguo laodong gaizao liaoli), the two financial sources of the labor camps are; 1) the national budget appropriation; and 2) the revenue of reform-through-labor institutions. However because China's economy has shifted from state planned to market based, appropriations are insufficient and local prisons are responsible for managing their finances. Prison authorities are pressured to produce large quantities and be financially self-sufficient. The incomes and living standards of wardens are directly connected to prisoners' productivity.

By 2003 as the number of ailing prisons increased, national authorities decided to intervene to prevent the collapse of the penal system. In 2003 the Ministry of Justice created new prison policies. The main points include: financial support for prisons' entire budgets, separation of prison and enterprise, separation of incomes and expenses, new operational rules, etc.³² However, LRF does not have sufficient evidence to confirm that financial support has actually been provided to prisons.

Liu Shi'en, a professor at the Central Legal Police Academy, stressed that prisons and enterprises should be separated in his article "Some Thoughts on Prison Production after the Separation of Prison and Enterprise" (Jianqi fenkai hou jianyu shengcha dingwei de sikao) on the Ministry of Justice website.³³ Professor Liu argued that prison enterprises are incompatible with a market economy and hinder market competition. Also, prisoners lack professional training and education and will not yield high rates of productivity. Liu offered five possible prison production reforms: 1) more investment from the state and other enterprises, or financing initiatives from society; 2) production should be limited to certain fields of processing to simplify equipment and management; 3) the state should offer low interest rate credit to prisons in terms of capital assets and circulating funds; 4) favorable tax regulations should be implemented for prisons; and 5) the government should buy back prison products. According to Liu, with all of these measures and state support, the Laogai system could develop a more healthy organization of production and labor.³⁴

Currently, the working conditions in the Laogai are extremely harsh. Prisons and RTLs often sign contracts with companies and factories to do their labor-intensive work. According to one Falun Gong website, many of the inmates in RTL camps have to work round the clock, 12--16 hours a day. Moreover they suffer from extreme hunger and are tortured. Many prisoners have died in the Laogai because of the demanding labor requirements and dangerous health conditions.³⁵

Introduction

Ministry of Justice, and the People's Liberation Army. LRF has gathered evidence on the main components of the Laogai as defined by Chinese law, policies, and practices. The legal definition of the Laogai includes the following components: prisons (jiansu), reform-through-labor detachments (laodong gaizao dui or laogaidui), reeducation-through-labor facilities (laodong jiaoyangsu or laojiaosu), forced job placement (qiangzhi jiuze or liuchang jiuze), detention centers (kanshusu), custody and repatriation (shourong qiansong), shelter and investigation (shourong shengcha), and juvenile offender facilities (shaoguansu). A less official component is psychiatric hospitalization. In general, prisons and Laogai detachments house "convicts," prisoners who have received formal sentencing by the courts (due process and judicial independence in China notwithstanding). The distinction in the terms prison and laogaidui stems from a 1994 prison law that replaced the term Laogai (reform through labor) with prison (jiansu). An article in the January 7, 1995 edition of the government-sanctioned Beijing Legal Daily (Fazhi ribao) revealed the reasoning behind this superficial change:

Our renaming of the Laogai is what our associating with the international community calls for, and it is favorable in our international human rights struggle. Henceforth, the word "Laogai" will no longer exist, but the function, character and tasks of our prison administration will remain unchanged.³⁶

Reeducation through labor facilities, or laojiaosu, house prisoners who receive "administrative discipline" and sentencing of up to three years by police or the courts with no formal trial. Detention centers are for "convicts" sentenced to short-term (usually less than two years) imprisonment by a court, those awaiting sentencing, and prisoners who are awaiting execution. Juvenile offender facilities are for adolescent "convicts" or reeducation through labor detainees. Finally, forced job placement personnel are subject to indefinite assigned labor at forced labor facilities as directed by the courts or the Laogai Department following the completion of their sentences. These prisoners are deemed "not fully reformed" and are therefore denied their freedom even after the completion of their sentences. This kind of extended imprisonment was widely practiced through the 1990s.³⁷ Today forced job placement has been largely abolished, but is still practiced in some regions.

Prisoners in all eight Laogai components are equally deprived of their freedom and basic human rights. Furthermore, all of those detained, with only rare exceptions, are forced to labor against their will. In this book, the term Laogai is used to refer to all forms of imprisonment because the CCP depends on each one to maintain control and power.

[1] Laogai: Reform through Labor

Those confined to Laogai prisons are criminals who have been arrested and sentenced, and are forced to labor in factories, workshops, mines or farms. Conditions vary from camp to camp and from year to year, however certain basic tenets remain the same. All prisoners undergo thought reform, and are forced to labor in appalling conditions. LRF researchers have confirmed sites where prisoners mine asbestos and other toxic chemicals with no protective gear, work with batteries and battery acid with no protection for their hands, tan hides while standing naked in vats filled three feet deep with chemicals used for softening animal skins, and work in improperly run mining facilities where explosions and other accidents are a common occurrence.

Political prisoners are commonly housed together with other prisoners, although there are numerous reports of these prisoners being put in solitary confinement. Reports of torture are widespread and include beatings with fists and cattle prods, exposure to extreme cold and extreme heat, sleep deprivation, shackling and starvation. Members of China's Uighur minority, and Falun Gong practitioners are frequent victims of torture in Chinese prisons.

[2] Laodong Jiaoyang (Laojiao): Reeducation through Labor

According to the 1957 law Laodong jiaoyang, commonly abbreviated as Laojiao, is an administrative type of reform designed to “reform idle, able-bodied people who violate law and discipline and who do no decent work, into new people, earning their own living” and “to further strengthen social order and enhance socialist construction.”³⁸ Legal proceedings are not needed to sentence an individual up to three years in the Laojiao. Family members and employers can recommend people for reeducation, but usually it is local police that decide the Laojiao term. Because Laojiao inmates are not considered convicted criminals, they are not counted as prisoners in official numbers or covered by international treaties. Moreover, the goods they are forced to produce are not addressed in bilateral trade agreements regarding forced labor products.

The 1979 amendments to the “Measures for Reeducation through Labor,” clarified which categories of people should undergo reeducation through labor:

Counterrevolutionaries and anti-Party, anti-socialist reactionaries, whose crimes are minor and not subject to criminal prosecution, and who have been dismissed by government offices, organizations, enterprises, schools or other units and have no way to make a living.³⁹

Later publicly issued copies of the same documents omitted the language about political dissidents, nevertheless, the purpose of Laojiao is clear—to eliminate all signs of dissent. On November 30, 1998, the Public Security Bureau issued a circular entitled “On the Issues of the Range of Reeducation through Labor”, which stated: “It is necessary to apply measures to strike the criminal activities in rural areas... Local ruffians, tyrants and scamps should be sent to reeducation through labor.”⁴⁰

In 1996 Lawyers Committee for Human Rights released a report on China’s newly revised Criminal Procedure Law, emphasizing that arbitrary detention violated international law standards. The report said:

As a non-criminal sanction, reeducation through labor is subject to none of the procedural constraints set out in the CPL. Reeducation through labor decisions are made by administrative committees and dominated by the police. Persons subject to these proceedings have no right to counsel or to a hearing, let alone a judicial determination of their obligations.⁴¹

Reports by several other human rights organizations, including Amnesty International, Human Rights Watch, and LRF also document the continued use of the Laojiao system to arbitrarily detain both penal and political criminals alike. Today, the Laojiao system continues in the cities and countryside, and is still used to detain dissidents and members of groups that the government deems illegal. LRF estimates anywhere between 500,000 and 2 million people currently suffer in the Laojiao.

[3] Jiuye: Forced Job Placement

One of the most blatant human rights abuses of the CCP is Jiuye. Through this system, prison authorities can detain criminals for years past the expiration of their sentences, and maintain even more control over dissidents. According to Chinese government regulations and criminal theory, a prisoner who is considered “not well reformed” or a recidivist may be forced to remain indefinitely in the Laogai camp. Chinese law stipulates that the following individuals are subject to forced job placement:

They include: important counter-revolutionaries... who show no evident signs of repentance during their terms and may revert to crimes after completing their terms, and assaulting the socialist system, vilifying the Party's line, principles, and policies...seriously violate reform regimen... those who consistently refuse to labor, or deliberately sabotage production and do not correct themselves despite repeated admonitions.⁴²

The National People's Congress in 1981 reiterated the circumstances under which prisoners can and should be detained in the Jiuye system:

Persons who commit crimes within three years after release from reeducation-through-labor or within five years after escape from reeducation-through-labor shall receive strict punishment and lose their urban residence. After they serve their terms, they shall get jobs in the farms where they have received reeducation-through-labor. They also may lose their urban residence so that after they serve their term, they usually are required to obtain employment on the farm and be denied jobs in large or medium-sized cities.⁴³

⁴³ "Decisions on Handling Escapees and Recidivists Who Are Under Reform Through Labor or Reeducation through Labor" adopted by the 19th session of the 5th NPC Standing Committee on June 10, 1981.

After the Tiananmen Square massacre in 1989, the Chinese government became hypersensitive and very fearful of any possible political opposition. This fear was revealed in a top-secret document of the Central Committee and State Council, Zhongfa [1989] No.3, which was circulated at the province and military zone level. In this document, the highest authorities ordered:

Build rapidly some farms in the border provinces (zones). Those who originated from Beijing, and who have completed their sentences or who have been released from reeducation through labor, are not allowed to return to Beijing, and they should be sent out to the farms to work. Those who have already returned, but who do not have reasonable jobs or good behavior, and for whom the possibility exists of breaking the law again, can be taken into custody and sent back to the farms. We must gather the experience of 'Forced Job Placement' and establish the law.⁴⁴

Jiuye is an applied system without clear judicial regulations and as a result hundreds of thousands of "criminals" have been detained indefinitely in Laogai farms, mines or factories to produce wealth for the State. A common saying among labor camp prisoners describes the true nature of forced job placement: “There is an end to Laogai, but Jiuye is forever.”

[4] Detention Centers

The purpose of detention centers is to hold criminals who are waiting to be sentenced, or who have been sentenced to two years or less. Detention centers are also used to house prisoners who are awaiting execution. All criminals in detention, whether sentenced or not, are required by law to engage in forced labor.⁴⁵

The number of criminals in detention centers fluctuates greatly in response to various government policies. Most un-sentenced prisoners either have already been convicted or are waiting to be transferred to a prison, labor or Laojiao camp. Because detention centers are governed by local cadres and are rarely subject to any central authority, conditions at the centers vary greatly. Some centers treat detainees humanely and working conditions are manageable, while at others inmates are tortured and labor conditions remain harsh.

The UN Working Group on Arbitrary Detention after its 2004 visit to China concluded that the government had made “no significant progress in reforming the administrative detention system to ensure judicial review and to conform to international law.”⁴⁶

[5] Custody and Repatriation

In urban centers throughout China, millions of migrants searching for work have created a unique population that is subject to arbitrary detention. The Custody and Repatriation (shourong qiansong, hereafter referred to as C&R) system, like Laojiao, is not considered a form of punishment but an administrative measure. This system has served as a means for police to easily round up undesirable elements in society; this often includes people in low-status positions, such as migrant workers, beggars, street children, garbage collectors, prostitutes, and the homeless. C&R affects more than two million people every year about 5-20% of whom are children. This method of detention has received little attention outside China until recently, mainly because those detained belong to marginalized groups in society. City authorities refer to these people as the “three no’s personnel” (sanwu ren yuan), meaning they have no papers, no job, and no fixed house. Those who do not have official papers to live and work in the cities are forced to return to their poverty-stricken native villages. According to Chinese law, police maintain the right to detain these groups and repatriate them at any time.⁴⁷

⁴⁷ Human Rights in China. Not Welcome at the Party: Behind the “Clean up” of China’s Cities. New York: HRIC Arbitrary Detention Series, No. 2, September 1999.

C&R occurs most commonly in urban areas just before public events to “cleanse” the area of lower-status elements. For example, Chinese authorities carried out massive city sweeps in 1993 when the International Olympic Committee inspected Beijing to host the 2000 summer Olympics. Thousands of beggars, low-status workers, and homeless people were taken into custody. After China lost its bid to host by a very slim margin, it was revealed that police had beaten a mentally retarded boy to death in one detention center. Similar sweeps also took place in Beijing when U.S. President Bill Clinton visited in 1998 and when UN Secretary General Kofi Annan visited in 2000.

The death of 27-year-old Sun Zhigang, a Hubei native and college graduate, in a custody and repatriation center is one tragic example of the ominous consequences of C&R. Sun worked in Shenzhen, Guangdong Province as a graphic designer. On March 17, 2003, after leaving his home he was arrested because police suspected him of being an illegal immigrant. He had forgotten his residency and identification documents at home. When his employer and friends arrived at the police station with the proper documents, they discovered that Sun was dead--his body was found at a prison hospital. Sun’s family spent 4,000 yuan for an autopsy that concluded he was badly burnt in five areas, and that he ultimately died of internal injuries. According to reports, while in the C&R facility other inmates beat Sun to death. Facility employees allegedly knew of and encouraged the beating. Sun’s murder elicited significant domestic and international condemnation, and Chinese authorities reacted quickly. No fewer than 18 suspects in Sun’s death were convicted and given harsh sentences, one staff member of the facility was executed, and several prisoners who allegedly carried out the beating received stiff jail terms or suspended death sentences. Police involved were given mostly administrative punishments. Sun’s death led to unprecedented public calls for abolition of the C&R detention for illegal migrants.⁴⁸

Accordingly, the central government abolished the 21-year-old Custody and Repatriation Law. New legislation was enacted entitled “Regulations on Helping and Supporting the Homeless and Tramps in the Cities” on August 1, 2003 to “deal humanely” with migrant workers. The new law is officially heralded as a major step in protecting migrant workers and others, however, looking at the text of the two regulations there is little substantive difference between the old and new except for the name change.⁴⁹ In June 2003 Fujian worker Peng Lingwang was beaten to death while in detention proving that the inhumane system of C&R continues despite the new law.

The upcoming summer Olympics in Beijing in 2008 will no doubt trigger massive sweeps in urban areas, and more deaths and beatings of innocent people are likely to occur.

[6] Shelter and Investigation

Shelter and investigation (shourong shengcha, hereafter S&I), another form of detention, is used by police to detain people without charge for up to three months merely on the suspicion that they may be involved in a crime. It bypasses the procedures for arrest and detention provided for in the Criminal Procedure Law (CPL) and is imposed without any judicial supervision.

In 1996 S&I was eliminated and reincorporated in diminished form into the revised CPL. This change was seen as a significant step forward in curbing arbitrary detention in China. However, these reforms had little effect because police can still detain a person indefinitely depending on the nature of his alleged offense before formally arresting him. Once a suspect is arrested, police and prosecutors are still able to detain him for months before trial while a case is “further investigated”.⁵⁰ The only change is that now authorities must decide more quickly how to deal with individuals following their detention. For those who are detained within this system the abusive practices that characterized S&I still exist.

camp are organized on provincial, municipal, and autonomous regional levels. The minimum age for prisoners in the Laojiao has varied over the years. In 1981 the Public Security Department in the “Notice on the Age Limit of the Custody and Reeducation through Labor”, declared that youth over 16 years old could be sent to Laojiao camps. Yet a 1983 document, “Answer to the Liaoning Province Bureau of Public Security ‘Inquiry into whether we should lower the age limit of Laojiao personnel’”, stated “for those youth who are over the age of 14 years but who have not yet reached the age of 16, who have committed minor crimes, and who must not be sentenced, an application can be submitted to the committee and they can be sent to Laojiao.” In 1993, the Public Security Department stipulated clearly in the “Notice on the Custody and Reeducation through Labor of Juvenile Delinquency Under 14 years of Age” that “When it is necessary, they [youth under 14] can be taken into custody and Laojiao.”⁵¹ All juvenile offenders no matter their age are forced to labor like other prisoners and are organized like adults in Laogai camps.⁵²

[8] Psychiatric Hospitals

Law enforcement authorities have the power to forcibly commit individuals to psychiatric facilities (Ankang). Political dissidents are often sent to psychiatric hospitals instead of jails because arrest warrants are not necessary.

A human rights activist Wang Wanxing was held in an Ankaung in Beijing for 13 years for unfurling a banner in Tiananmen Square in 1992.⁵³ Wang was released in August 2005 and allowed to leave the country to join his wife in Germany. International specialists have examined Wang and found that he is a man with a healthy mind and spirit.⁵⁴ Wang, Falun Gong practitioners, and others detained in asylums report being forced to take sedating drugs and undergo electric shock.⁵⁵

In August 2002, participants at the Twelfth World Congress of the World Psychiatric Association (WPA) criticized the Chinese government for detaining political dissidents in psychiatric facilities. “According to the evidence we have, in China there are thousands of normal people who have been thrown into psychiatry because of political reasons,” said Dr. Juan Lopez-Ibor, the president of the WPA. The Congress passed a resolution on August 26, 2002 stating that the WPA would send a group of international psychiatrists to visit China in the near future to investigate this issue. One and a half years later on March 26, 2004, the new president of the WPA, Dr. A.

Undoubtedly the Chinese authorities do not want psychiatric specialists to witness the practice of detaining mentally healthy people in psychiatric facilities.

The Laogai Economy

Besides being an important part of China’s public security and a tool of the dictatorship, the Laogai camps are also an integral part of China’s national economy. Forced labor is a central government policy created to promote the CCP’s development goals. Because prisoners are not paid for their work a huge profit margin is possible, and inmates have no means to voice their grievances as labor unions are forbidden. Local and national governments receive huge amounts of revenue from enterprise taxes.

In an opening essay of an official Chinese government document entitled, “On the Present Conditions of Laogai Economics”, the function of the Laogai as one part of the government’s economic program is explained:

Laogai economics has the dual characteristics of the management of economic administration and the study of reform through labor. In viewing the socialist ownership of means of production under the control of the whole people it is a component of the socialist national economy...Among Laogai products, some are indispensable goods in the national plan and the people's lives, some are used in national defense industries; some special products which are made with Laogai characteristics are welcomed by society; some have already been named as national or provincial superior products; [and] some have reached world-class, advanced levels. Some of the products are even exported to various parts of the world, not only earning large amounts of foreign currency, but also winning praise for the state.⁵⁶

Laogai officials in recent years have put more emphasis on meeting economic goals and gaining recognition than with actually reforming criminals. The removal of direct government financial support for the Laogai pushes the drive for increased production and income for individual enterprises.

In a bulletin entitled “The Demands of the Country's Condition- Strength and Realities”, the CCP expounded upon the need for the Laogai camps to be self-sufficient:

Due to our national condition and strength, the country cannot provide to the Laogai Departments all the expenses they require. Because of this, it is extremely necessary that Laogai Departments, while not influencing the reform of criminals [i.e. not sacrificing the reform aspect of the Laogai system], strengthen production and management administration, and mobilize and expand prisoners' enthusiasm to labor and produce, thus creating more wealth for the state through reform-through-labor.⁵⁷

Chinese authorities carefully monitor labor production in the Laogai system to reward the most productive facilities and “correct” the performances of less productive ones. Laogai enterprises participate in national evaluations to ensure that production has reached certain standards. Despite denials by Chinese officials, the government encourages the export of Laogai goods. “Laogai units, which develop foreign-oriented economies, not only create large amounts of foreign currency for the state and increase state revenues; the Laogai units themselves develop.”⁵⁸ The highest quality Laogai products are selected for export to U.S. and world markets.

As aforementioned in 2003 the central government realized that some prisons could not survive without funding. New policies stipulated that provincial, city and local governments must provide prisons' budgets. These state-owned enterprises now enjoy property and land tax exemptions and have value-added tax privileges.⁵⁹

Moreover, many Laogai enterprises today produce far beyond a self-sufficient capacity and several have become huge industrial conglomerates such as in Liaoning, Shandong, and many other provinces. A successful example of the enterprise-prison model is Jinzhou Switch Factory and Jinzhou Jinkai Electrical Group in Liaoning Province, also known as Jinzhou Prison. This camp has assets worth 302 million yuan (approximately $38 million US dollars), sales revenue from 2003 was over 300 million, and profits and taxes equaled more than 40 million yuan. The enterprise area covers 600,000 square meters. On February 27, 2006 Jinzhou Industry was ranked one of the 10 best enterprises in China.⁶⁰

Also in Liaoning province is the recently established Liaoning Province Prison Enterprises Corporation. Created solely to manage Laogai enterprises in Liaoning, the company engages in asset management, capital operation, and labor operations. Employees number around 10,000 within 26 affiliate companies, and total assets equal 3 billion yuan ($379.1 million US dollars). The Corporation manages the following enterprises: Jinzhou Jinkai Electrical, Shenyang Xinsheng Power Plants, Liaoning Lingyuan Hongling Motor Group, Dalian Machine Tool Wafangdian, Fushun Machine Tool Manufacturing, Taixing Industries Ltd, Liaoning Province Shen'an Engineering Company, Shenyang Ningda Clothing, Shenyang Dongbei Xiangsu Materials Ltd, Shimen Silicon Quarry.⁶¹

Other examples of the enterprise-prison model are in Shandong province. Ji'nan Shengjian Electrical Machinery Plant and Ji'nan Electric Power Equipment Factory also called Provincial No. 1 Prison has assets worth 1.25 billion yuan ($158 million US dollars) and is affiliated with a Swiss manufacturing company. Many of its products have won national and international prizes.⁶²

These Laogai enterprises highlight the vital role that forced labor plays in China's double digit GDP growth and enormous foreign currency reserve. It is time for the international community to stop extolling China for its impressive development and start examining the true sources of the country's wealth.

“Laogai” Enters the World Lexicon

In 2003 the word laogai was entered into two Oxford dictionaries:

The laogai in China, a system of labour camps, many of whose inmates are political dissidents. The name comes from Chinese, meaning ‘reform through labour’, and is recorded from English from the 1990s.

-Oxford Dictionary

In 1996 the Chinese born American activist, Harry Wu, said: “I want to see the word laogai in every language in the world. I want to see the Laogai ended.” He went on to draw a parallel with the word gulag, suggesting that it was only as in the mid 1970s that the word became known that pressure for the system to end began to grow.

Introduction

-The Oxford Dictionary of Phrase and Fable

In 2005 laogai was added to the renowned German dictionary Duden Die deutsche Rechtschreibung 2004 (23rd edition).

Indeed, not only Harry Wu but all people who love peace and freedom would like to see an end to the Laogai. Unfortunately there is still much progress to be made.

About the Handbook

Because of the closed and secret nature of the Laogai system, it is impossible to present a completely precise and accurate record of how many Laogai camps exist in China, and how many prisoners are in these camps today. The CCP considers all data on the Laogai system to be state secrets, and refuses to allow outside entities to access Laogai camps including the International Red Cross. We acknowledge that there may be factual errors in this book. Nevertheless, the information LRF has compiled is the most authoritative record that exists on China’s Laogai system, second of course to China’s central government.

The Laogai Handbook also contains information about some camps that have been dismantled, merged, or moved, because the purpose of this book is not only to provide a list of camps that are currently operating, but also to supply historical information. When such changes are known to have occurred they are noted. The Handbook does not contain information about detention centers usually run by the Public Security Bureau at the village, township and county levels. However, prisoners in detention do suffer from numerous human rights abuses, and for many these centers are just the beginning of a much longer and darker journey through the Laogai system.

Most Laogai camps have two names: a public name (usually an enterprise name), and an internal administrative name. These names represent the political and economic functions of the camps. Yinying Coal Mine in Shanxi Province, for example, is the public name for the Yangquan No. 1 Prison. Laogai facilities may operate under multiple enterprise names in order to publicize their production and participate in the commercial arena, as well as to avoid detection by international observers. Furthermore, Laogai facilities may also operate under multiple internal names as designated by the Judicial Department in the course of implementing central government edicts. For example, the Laogai with the commercial name Qingdao Shengjian Machine Works (see Shandong Province, 21-02) has two internal names: Lanxi Prison and Prov. No. 2 Prison. Camps that have an * in front of its code means LRF was unable to verify details.

Involvement of the US Customs Service

List of Detention Orders, Findings and Visits

US Customs is responsible for enforcing two bilateral agreements between the US and China: 1) a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) safeguarding against the export of prison labor goods from August 7, 1992, and 2) a “statement of cooperation” creating guidelines for the MOU implementation from March 14, 1994. Both ban the import of forced labor products from China.

Customs has prescribed steps to investigate suspected imported forced labor products. The first is the temporary “detention order”. Detention orders are issued based on information that reasonably, but not always conclusively indicates forced labor products. These orders prevent the release of these products into the US. The second step, a “finding”, can only be issued after the Customs Commissioner can prove probable cause and receives approval from the Secretary of the Treasury. The filing of a finding places a ban on the importation of the product.

Editor's Note:

After 1995 cooperation between the US and China regarding prison labor exports has significantly deteriorated. According to the US-China Security Review Commission, Customs has stated that it cannot conduct independent investigations in China because the Chinese government refuses to comply with the agreements. From 1992-2000 Customs opened 84 criminal investigations and issued 20 detention orders, yet only 2 cases resulted in convictions. Since 1996, Customs has sent 30 letters to the Chinese Ministry of Justice requesting visits or investigations of prisons. None have been answered. The Commission asserts:

The U.S. should improve enforcement against imports of Chinese goods made from prison labor by shifting the burden of proof to U.S. importers and by more stringent requirements relating to visits to Chinese facilities suspected of producing and exporting prison-made goods to the United States.¹

PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA REGULATIONS ON REFORM THROUGH LABOR

(Adopted by Government Administration Council on August 26, 1954, promulgated by Government Administration Council on September 7, 1954.)

Chapter One: General Principles

- Article 1 These regulations are formulated for punishing all counterrevolutionary criminals and other criminals and for forcing them to reform themselves into new people pursuant to Article 7, "Common Program of Chinese People's Political-Consultative Conference."
- Article 2 Reform-through-labor facilities of the People's Republic of China are one of the tools of people's dictatorship, and are institutions for punishing and reforming all counterrevolutionary criminals and other criminals.
- Article 3 Criminals' reform through labor: prisons and reform-through-labor disciplinary facilities are established for confining sentenced criminals in accordance to the nature of their crimes and severity of punishment.
Detention facilities should be established for confining criminals who have not yet been sentenced.
Juvenile offense disciplinary facilities should be established for educating and reforming juvenile offenders.

Chapter Two: Reform-Through-Labor Facilities

Section One: Detention Facilities

- Article 8 Detention facilities are mainly for confining criminals who have not yet been sentenced. Criminals sentenced to less than 3 years who will pose problems if confined in reform-through-labor disciplinary facilities can be confined in detention facilities

Section Two: Prisons

- Article 3 Prisons are mainly for confining counterrevolutionary criminals and other serious criminals sentenced to death with a reprieve or to life imprisonment and are not to be confined and labor outside prisons.

Section Three: Reform-Through-Labor Disciplinary Facilities

- Article 17 Reform-through-labor disciplinary facilities are for confining sentenced counterrevolutionary criminals and other criminals who can be confined and labor outside prisons.

Article 18 Reform-through-labor disciplinary facilities must organize criminals in planned production: agriculture, industry, construction engineering, etc., and indoctrinate them politically in labor and production.

Section Four: Juvenile Offenders' Disciplinary Facilities

Article 21 Juvenile offenders' disciplinary facilities are for confining and disciplining juvenile offenders aged over 13 but under 18.

Chapter Four: Reform-Through-Labor Production

Article 30 Reform-through-labor production must serve economic construction of the state and be a part of the general plan of production and construction of the state.

Article 31 Reform-through-labor production is conducted under unified guidance of people's government offices' financial-economic committees at all levels, and is concretely guided by related organs: agriculture, forestry, industry, finance, transportation, irrigation, commerce, etc.

Article 33 Orientation of development of reform-through-labor production is: to be managed in a centralized way by provinces and municipalities; to vigorously promote agricultural production; to engage in industrial, mining / coal-pit production that offers development opportunities; to organize irrigation, road building and other construction projects. Prefectures / counties (cities) mainly organize within-detention-facility production, but may also engage in out-of-detention-facility production within the jurisdiction of prefectures / counties (cities).

DETAILS OF PRISON AND REFORM-THROUGH-LABOR FACILITY DISCIPLINARY ADMINISTRATION

(Notified by Ministry of Public Security for Trial Procedure by Local Departments)

Chapter One: General Principles

Article 2 Prisons and reform-through-labor facilities are one of the tools of people's democratic dictatorship, and are institutions for punishing and reforming criminals.

Chapter Two: Execution of Penalty

Section One: Custody

Article 7 Prisons take into custody counterrevolutionary criminals and other criminals sentenced to death penalty with 2-year reprieve, to life imprisonment and 10-year / over-10-year imprisonment; also criminals of foreign nationality, criminals who had access to state secrets, as well as female criminals.

Female criminals should be confined in female prisons or prisons' female departments, and are managed and disciplined exclusively by female cadres of the Communist Party and Policewomen. Reform-through-labor facilities confine criminals sentenced to set-term imprisonment with more than one year to go who do not fall under the category of prison custody.

OFFICE OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF THE CHINESE COMMUNIST PARTY
STATE COUNCIL OFFICE TRANSFERRING “MINUTES OF EIGHTH NATIONAL REFORM-THROUGH-LABOR WORK CONFERENCE”

Zhong-ban-fa-[1981]-#44

The Party's Central Committee and State Council are of the opinion that reforming criminals through labor is a part of the great and glorious cause of our Party and state in reforming people and transforming society. Conscientious implementation of this work is of vital importance for thoroughly improving social order and for further consolidation of people's democratic dictatorship.

In our time big changes have taken place as far as targets of reform through labor are concerned, most of them being of worker-peasant family background. Many young criminals, particularly juveniles, turn to crime, being corroded by anarchism, extreme individualism as well as decadent overseas ideology and way of life.

- III. Adjustment of policy related to expired personnel subject to forced within-the-farm/factory job placement
...Special, strict-regimen farms/factories or separate teams should be established for expired personnel. Except for those deprived of political rights, personnel enjoy citizen rights, but must go on reforming themselves under control. Economically, they get equal pay for equal work. To facilitate their reform and give them a way out, public security departments should, taking into consideration their original terms, fix their corresponding probation periods. In principle, those who have truly reformed themselves may return to their original places of residency.
2. From now on, except for those subject to forced within-the-system job placement, all other expired prisoners should be sent back to their pre-arrest places of residency or to their direct family members.

NOTICE OF THE SYMPOSIUM ON EXTERNALLY
OPENING UP
REFORM-THROUGH-LABOR UNITS

August 14, 1979

Gong-shi-yi-zi-[79]-#1024

I. Defining significance of opening up externally; conscientiously implementing the Party's policy; strengthening reform-through-labor work; enhancing quality of reform through labor Under the leadership of the Party's Central Committee and Chairman Mao our nation has implemented the policy of reforming criminals sentenced to imprisonment through labor in accordance with the law. Practice shows that this policy of transforming criminals into new people has played its vital role in upholding social order and in consolidating dictatorship of the proletariat. Since 1952, three prisons in Beijing, Shanghai and Shenyang and Shezhu Reform-Through-Labor Farm in Jiangsu Province have received thousands foreign visitors from one hundred plus countries and regions of the five continents. The guests highly commended our policy of reforming criminals through labor and said they wanted to learn from us and would give publicity to our accomplishments upon returning home. As our international situation develops and our international prestige heightens, more and more people visit China. Hence, more and more people visit reform-through-labor facilities. In view of this situation, further improving reception of foreign guests, giving publicity to our policy of reforming criminals through labor, its accomplishments and superiority of our socialist system, and expanding our political influence has become an important aspect of our external propaganda which must be implemented conscientiously.

- II. Get fully prepared for opening up externally. Depending upon preparatory work, one expects good results of visitation, international influence and foreign guests' security. It is imperative to effectively strengthen prison administration and management, to consolidate order of reform, to strengthen ideological education, to create a good environment for reform, to strengthen production management, to produce in a safe and civilized manner, to set up and amplify cadres' and policemen's personal accountability and to conscientiously formulate plan of reception pursuant to the five regulations of Ministry of Public Security document #59 of April 12, 1979. It is also imperative to promptly check up on old, weak, sick and disabled prisoners, sending part of prisoners from overcrowded units to other places. Sent-in enemy agents, mental patients and hard-to-manage prisoners must be taken out of units to be opened up externally. Dangerous elements must be taken out from visitation routes. Various security measures must be implemented to ensure absolute security of foreign guests.
- III. Plan of reception: to select a visitation route that can reflect our reform activities; to screen and educate prisoners who are appointed to talk to foreign guests; synopsis of briefing and answers to foreign guests' questions must be concise and accurate; to closely contact foreign affairs units for acquiring a basic understanding of foreign guests and their intentions, thereby emphasizing certain aspects of answers to their questions accordingly. Pre-visit arrangement and deployment must be thoroughly prepared, but without falsification. Prisons and reform-through-labor facilities to be opened up externally should be introduced in their place names, not codes...

- IV. To conscientiously conduct external propaganda by insisting on the principle of being practical and realistic and differentiating ourselves from outsiders. The Center's principle of external propaganda is: to be practical and realistic; to differentiate ourselves from outsiders. This principle must be followed while formulating reception plans and answering to foreign guests' questions. Briefings must conform to current situations and People's Daily news reports and must conform to what foreign guests actually see. It is imperative to pay attention to tactics. It is imperative to stress with perfect assurance what should be clarified, and to politely decline what should be avoided, i.e.; to strictly safeguard state secrets.

At the same time, the following preparations must be implemented:
 1. Factories/farms approved to receive foreign businessmen must put reform / disciplinary work and production management in good order, must make good preparations for reception. Plan of reception must be drafted in advance: items to be visited, route, synopsis of answers to possible questions, etc., and must be submitted to public security bureaus of provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions for approval.

TRIAL MEASURES OF REEDUCATION THROUGH LABOR

Chapter One: General Principles

- foreign businessmen and in signing contracts. Should foreign businessmen pose questions related to prisoner reform while they are being briefed on production issues, answers can be given in accordance with regulations formulated for opening up units, and appropriate publicity should be given to the Party's reform-through-labor policy.
3. Business staff assigned to receive foreign businessmen must be briefed on points for attention and be trained by foreign affairs units. Other cadres, blue-collar workers and job-placement personnel must guard secrets and abide by the Party's discipline-related education, and should principally avoid contacting foreign businessmen. Prisoners must obey prison discipline, must be courteous, but are exclusively forbidden to contact foreign businessmen.
 4. Foreign businessmen's board is taken care of by external trade departments.
 5. To thoroughly ensure foreign businessmen's security, proper measures must be undertaken according to the principle of "strict internally, easy-going outwardly." Disciplinary management must be tightened for avoiding accidents.
- II. Should foreign businessmen wish to visit units poor in production conditions and capable of producing only small quantities of goods, courteous refusal must be given via external trade departments.
- III. As special national enterprises reform-through-labor units principally do not engage in joint-venture management with foreign businessmen.

- Article 2 By reeducation through labor are meant compulsory administrative measures aimed at reeducating and reforming reeducation-through-labor elements, and is a means for handling contradictions among the people.
- Article 4 ...Reeducation-through-labor facilities are organizations for reeducating and reforming elements subject to reeducation through labor, are special schools for reforming and training people as well as special enterprises.
- Article 5 Expenditure for reeducation through labor is part of local financial budgets. Reeducation-through-labor capital construction is part of local capital construction plans. Reeducation-through-labor production is part of local plans and is conducted under the guidance of local production organizations.

Chapter Two: Reeducation-Through- Labor Facilities

Article 7 ...Reeducation-through-labor facilities are named as XXX Province (Municipality, Autonomous Region) XXX (Place Name) Reeducation-Through-Labor Administration Facility. Names of productive units are determined by their production lines. Reeducation-through-labor facilities that operate well may change their names to reeducation-through-labor schools with the approval of reeducation-through-labor administrative committees of provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government.

Chapter Three: Admittance Examination and Approval

Article 9 Reeducation-through-labor facilities admit persons living in big and medium-sized cities and must be reeducated through labor. Rural residents who migrate and commit offences in cities, along railroads or in mining enterprises may also be sent to reeducation through labor if their cases warrant such.

Article 10 The following categories of elements should be sent to reeducation through labor:

- (1) Anti-Party, anti-socialist elements who commit offences that do not warrant criminal penalty;

CHINESE COMMUNIST PARTY CENTRAL COMMITTEE INSTRUCTIONS ON IMMEDIATE PREPARATION FOR SETTING UP REEDUCATION- THROUGH-LABOR FACILITIES

(Excepts)
January 1956

- I. In view of the necessity to appropriately dispose of counterrevolutionary elements and other bad elements ferreted out during the movement and to wipe out all hidden counterrevolutionary elements who do not warrant arrest and criminal penalty but are politically unfit for further employment and may add to unemployment if discharged into public, the Center has decided to solve the problem by reeducation through labor: to muster those elements and escort them to appointed places, organize them in labor and production, thus making them own their own living, and to subject them to political thought reform, the purpose being to gradually change them into truly useful people for the nation.
- II. Elements escorted to reeducation through labor are ferreted out counterrevolutionary elements and other bad elements who have committed certain offenses and must be placed under public surveillance, as well as those elements whose offenses do not warrant public surveillance but must be escorted to reeducation through labor. These reeducation-through-labor elements are different from reform-through-labor criminals in that while subject to reform through labor are sentenced criminals, reeducation-through-labor elements are those subject only to the penalty of surveillance (concentrated surveillance, different from public surveillance in society) or those imposed compulsory sanctions by state administrative organs.

NOTICE ON OPENING REEDUCATION-THROUGH-LABOR FACILITIES TO FOREIGN VISITORS

February 1, 1982
[82]-Gong-fa-#13

To: Public security departments / bureaus of provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions:

To give better external publicity to our reeducation-through-labor guiding principles and policies and to give international friends a directly perceived comprehension of our tremendous accomplishments in educating youth, helping them to change by persuasion and thus manifest superiority of the socialist rule by law, it has been decided to open to foreign visitors seventeen reeducation-through-labor facilities (list omitted)...

I. To set up and strengthen system of cadres' and policemen's personal accountability; cadres and policemen must stand fast on their posts and fulfill their duties; while receiving foreign visitors, they must be properly dressed and fully disciplined, must treat visitors courteously, in a way neither supercilious nor obsequious.

- II. To educate reeducation-through-labor personnel that while foreign guests are visiting the facility they must abide by discipline, behave in a civilized, spirited, courteous and friendly manner; staff must closely monitor reeducation-through-labor personnel's behavior, the purpose being to ensure foreign visitors' security.
- III. To deliberate and formulate reception plan: items to be visited, route of visit...

December 1984

...There are basically two forms of management of released reeducation-through-labor personnel subject to within-the-system job placement: one form: special facilities and centralized management should their number be big enough to warrant this form; another form: separate teams within reeducation-through-labor facilities if their number is too small to warrant the first form, or mixed expired/unexpired personnel management...

- IV. In principle special facilities should be established for released reeducation-through-labor personnel, or separate teams should be formed if their number is too small to warrant separate facilities. CENTRAL POLITICAL AND LAW COMMITTEE OPINION ON WHETHER VICIOUS ASSAULT AND LIBEL AGAINST CENTRAL LEADERS CONSTITUTE CRIME

(Excerpts)
December 1981

Should counterrevolutionary opinions be aimed at propaganda and instigation, including vicious assault and libel against Party and state leaders, and constitute crimes violating Article 10 as well as other provisions of the Criminal Code, public security organs must immediately and thoroughly investigate involved cases; public security organs, prosecution offices and courts must, considering facts, nature, circumstances and consequences of the cases, affix violators' criminal responsibility and sentence them on charges of counterrevolutionary instigation; in certain cases violators can be sent to reeducation through labor pursuant to the Decision on Reeducation Through Labor.

NOTICE ISSUED BY MINISTRY OF FINANCE AND NATIONAL REVENUE BUREAU

Re: Value-added Tax Collection Policy for prison enterprises and RTLs

Issued date: 1998-04-20

Effective: 1998-04-20

All provinces, autonomous regions, municipalities and cities directly under the jurisdiction the Ministry of Finance Office of State Tax Administration: In order to support the development of prison enterprises and re-education through labor facilities, the State Department ratified the Value-added Tax Collection Policy. The regulations are as follows:

1. Value added tax cuts for prison enterprises are defined as: inmates labor venues, and all property belonging to the production units of the prison or RTL is controlled to the Ministry of Justice Prison Administration and RTL Bureau of each province (autonomous regions and municipalities). In order to support the “separate the enterprise and prison functions” reform, to comply with the above requirements, all prison and RTL enterprises must use the existing productive conditions to increase input for renovation and form new production units. All property still belongs to the prison and RTL facilities. The new unit can work closely with the former enterprises for technology cooperation. The tax return policy on this notice can then be applied.

2. The value-added tax return should be used mainly as supplementary capital for the enterprise, not to exceed 30%. The proportion can be arranged by consulting with the Ministry of Justice Prison Authority and the RTL Bureau. Any value-added tax produced by the workers in the newly formed production units should be used only as capital.

3. Local financial supervisors shall follow the Caiyuzi No. 55 (1994) rule of the Ministry of Finance Department, National Revenue Bureau, and the Chinese People’s Bank for tax return regulations.

4. All enterprises that have been established for allocating the family members of prisoners, and prison enterprises created by foreign joint ventures with no official property rights are not eligible for the value-added tax policy.

5. The enterprises under the Prison Administration of Xinjiang Production and Construction Corps shall follow the same rule.

This policy shall be implemented beginning on January 1, 1998.

(三) 调整刑满留场(厂)就业人员的政策

刑满释放后强制留场(厂)的人员，要设置专场(厂)或单独编队，严格管理，除依法剥夺政治权利的以外，仍享有公民权，但要实行监督改造。经济上实行同工同酬。为了促进他们的改造，给予出路，上公安部根据原判刑期规定相应的监督考察期，对确实改造好了的，原则上可以回原来居住的地方。

2、今后犯人开满释放，除强制留场就业的以外，均应放回捕前所在地或直系亲属所在地。...

公安部十一局印发
《关于劳改单位对外开放工作座谈会的情况报告》的通知
公十一字[79]1024号

关于劳改单位对外开放工作座谈会的情况报告

一、明确对外开放的意义，认真执行党的政策加强改造工作，提高改造质量。

在党中央、毛主席的领导下，我国对依法判处徒刑的罪犯实行劳动改造的政策。实践证明，这项把罪犯改造成为新人的政策，对于维护社会治安、巩固无产阶级专政，已经起到了重大作用。一九五二年以来，北京、上海、沈阳三个监狱和江苏省社诸劳改农场，先后接待了五大洲一百多个国家和地区的数千名外宾。他们高度评价了我国劳动改造罪犯的政策，表示要向我们学习，回国宣传我们的成就。随着国际形势的发展和我国国际威望的提高，来华访问的越来越多，参观劳改单位的也与日俱增。因此，进一步做好接待工作，宣传我国劳动改造罪犯的政策、工作成就和社会主义制度的优越性，扩大我国的政治影响，是对外宣传的一个重要方面。应当努力搞好这项工作。

.....

二、充分做好对外开放的准备工作

准备工作关系到参观的效果、国际影响和外宾安全。必须按照公安部一九七九年四月十二日59号文件的五条规定，切实加强狱政管理，整顿好改造秩序，加强思想教育，创造良好的改造环境；加强生产管理，做到安全文明生产，建立健全干警的岗位责任制，认真制定接待方案。还应抓紧清理老弱病残犯；监房过分拥挤的单位，可适当

调出一些犯人，派遣特务，精神病犯和难于控制的应调出开放单位，危险分子应调离参观线路。落实各项安全保卫措施，确保外宾的绝对安全。

接待方案，应选定一条能够反映出劳改工作面貌的参观线路，物色、教育好准备外宾个别谈话的犯人，解答问题和介绍情况的提纲，要简练、准确，密切与外事部门联系，了解参观成员的简况和意图，解答问题应有所侧重。参观前的安排部署，既要有所准备，又不要弄虚作假。对外开放的监狱，劳改队，一律冠以地名，不使用番号或代号。

三、坚持实事求是，内外有别的原则，做好对外宣传作用。

中央对外宣传的原则是：实事求是、内外有别。劳改单位在拟定接待方案和回答提问时，也应当遵循这个原则。介绍情况要和当时的形势、《人民日报》的新闻报导一致，要让外宾看到的实际情况相符合。注意策略，应当凌晨的就理直气壮地讲，不应当讲的婉言回避，严守国家机密。

公安部关于
外国商人去劳改企业参观订货有关问题的通知

公发[1979]171号

一、生产技术条件较好，出口产品批量较大，或有条件搞补偿贸易的单位，如外商要求来厂(场)参观订货的生产情况，原则上可以同意，但要报请省、市、自治区人民政府批准，抄报公安部。并做好以下准备工作：

1、批准接待外商的厂(场)要按开放劳改单位的要求，整顿管教工作秩序和生产管理工作秩序，认真做好接待的准备工作。每次接待之前，应拟定接待方案，如参观项目、线路和座谈提问的解答提纲等，报省、市、自治区公安局批准。

2、对外商接谈生产业务、签订合同，一律使用企业对外名称。在介绍生产情况时，如外商提出有关改造犯人的问题，可按对外开放单位的有关规定解答，并适当宣传党的劳改政策。

3、负责接待外商的有关业务人员，要请外事部门接待注意事项，进行必要的训练。对其他干部、工人以及就业人员要进行保守机密，遵守纪律的教育，一般不要接触外商。要教育犯人严格遵守监规纪律，有礼貌，一律不准接触外商。

4、外商的食宿问题，由外贸部门负责安排。

5、做好外商的安全保卫工作。外商在厂期间，要按照内紧外松的原则，采取切实的措施，严格监管工作，防止发生意外事件。

二、生产条件很差，出口产品批量较小的单位，如外商要求参观，应通过外贸部门婉言谢绝。

三、劳改单位是特殊性质的国营企业，原则上不与外商搞合资经营企业。

关于劳改劳教单位清理的就业人员工资不予补发的通知

(1987年12月2日)

各省、自治区、直辖市党委统战部，各省、自治区、直辖市政府司法厅(局)、西藏自治区公安厅：

在落实政策过程中，有的地方提出：“文革”前因错案被劳改或劳教的人员，刑满、解教后留在劳改、劳教单位就业，“文革”期间，被劳改劳教单位按照留场就业政策清理回社会安置，现错案已平反，他们被清理期间的工资是否补发的问题。经研究，答复如下：

一、清理劳改、劳教人员离场，是劳改劳教单位的一项正常工作，过去执行，现在仍继续执行。它不是“文革”中劳改劳教单位制造的冤假错案。

二、劳改劳教单位安置刑满、解教人员留场就业是解决社会安置就业困难而采取的一项措施。刑满、解教留场就业人员没有转工的不是国家正式职工。

三、因此，在“文革”前因错案被判刑或劳教，期满后留场就业，“文革”期间由劳改、劳教单位按留场就业人员清理回社会安置，现在错案已平反的人员，是“文革”前的错案，不存在补发清理后至平反改正期间工资的问题。

四、请各地做好这部分平反人员的思想工作。过去有的地方，已经补发工资的，不再收回。

财政部、国家税务总局关于对监狱劳教企业 实行增值税先征后返问题的通知

发文机关 财政部/税务总局 法规文号

颁布日期 1998-04-20 生效日期 1998-04-20

各省、自治区、直辖市、计划单列市财政厅（局）、国家税务局，财政部驻各省、自治区、直辖市、计划单列市财政监察专员办事处：为了扶持监狱、劳教企业的发展，经国务院批准，在2000年底以前，对监狱、劳教企业实行增值税先征后返政策，具体规定如下：

一、实行增值税先征后返的监狱、劳教企业是指：为犯罪、劳教人员提供劳动场所，且全部产权属于监狱、劳教系统的生产单位，即全部产权属于司法部监狱管理局、劳教局，各省（区、市）监狱管理局、劳教局和各监狱、劳教所的生产单位。

为支持“监企分开”改革，对符合上述规定的监狱、劳教企业，利用现有的生产条件和增加投入进行改造，把原企业部分工人分离出来，组成新的生产单位，全部产权仍属于监狱、劳教系统、并与原监狱企业形成紧密工艺衔接和配套关系的，也可执行本通知规定的税收返还政策。

二、返还的增值税税款主要作为增加国家对企业补充的资本金，其余部分用于解决狱政设施维修经费不足问题。其中，用于增加国家的资本金的部分不少于70%，用于解决狱（所）政设施维修经费不足的部分不大于30%。具体比例由司法部监狱管理局、劳教局和各省监狱管理局、劳教局根据各地具体情况研究确定。对从监狱、劳

教系统生产单位分离出来的由工人组成的新的生产单位返还的增值税，全部作为增加国家资本金投入。

三、税款的具体返还办法由财政部驻各地财政监察专员办事机构按财政部、国家税务总局、中国人民银行（1994）财预字第55号文件的规定执行。

四、对监狱、劳教系统为安置本系统家属、子女兴办的其他企业、监狱、劳教系统所属企业与外系统合资兴办的联营企业，以及挂靠监狱、劳教系统但没有产权关系的其他企业，不得享受增值税返还政策。

五、新疆生产建设兵团监狱局所属监狱企业比照上述规定执行。

本通知自1998年1月1日起执行。

公安部关于审批劳动教养案件有关程序问题的批复

1999年6月9日 公复发第3号

……

在审批劳动教养案件时，对需要劳动教养的人，可以根据案件情况，征求本人所在单位或者街道组织的意见，但是，单位或者街道组织的意见不作为审批劳动教养案件的必经程序。
